

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY

HomeTreasury For...AboutResource CenterServicesPress ReleasesDaily GuidanceMedia Schedule and AdvisoriesNewsPhotosVideo, Audio, and WebcastsPress Contacts

Press Center

Home » Press Center » Press Releases » Statement by Secretary Henry M. Paulson, Jr. on Compr

Statement by Secretary Henry M. Paulson, Jr. on Comprehensive Developments

9/19/2008

hp-1149

Washington, DC-- Last night, Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke, SEC Chairman and Treasury Secretary Henry M. Paulson, Jr. held a productive working session with Congressional leaders. We began a substantive discussion about a comprehensive approach to relieving the stresses on our financial institutions and markets.

We have acted on a case-by-case basis in recent weeks, addressing problems at Fannie Mae, helping market participants to prepare for the failure of Lehman Brothers, and lending to AIG so it can continue to operate in a manner. And this morning we've taken a number of powerful tactical steps to increase confidence in the financial system and the establishment of a temporary guaranty program for the U.S. money market mutual fund industry.

Despite these steps, more is needed. We must now take further, decisive action to find the root cause of our financial system's stresses.

The underlying weakness in our financial system today is the illiquid mortgage assets that have accumulated. These illiquid assets are choking off the flow of credit that is so vital to the way our system works as it should, money and capital flow to and from households and businesses, and investments that create jobs. As illiquid mortgage assets block the system, the clogging has significant effects on our financial system and our economy.

As we all know, lax lending practices earlier this decade led to irresponsible lending and it put many families into mortgages they could not afford. We are seeing the impact on homeowners now delinquent or in foreclosure. What began as a sub-prime lending problem has become a problem for all mortgages, and contributed to excess home inventories that have pushed down home prices.

A similar scenario is playing out among the lenders who made those mortgages, the securitizers who sold them, and the investors who bought them. These troubled loans are now parked, and other financial institutions, preventing them from financing productive loans. The increased uncertainty about mortgage assets, and even about the financial condition of the institutions holding them, has made the selling of nearly all types of mortgage assets has become challenged.

These illiquid assets are clogging up our financial system, and undermining the strength of our otherwise sound financial institutions. As a result, Americans' personal savings are threatened, and the ability of consumers and businesses to borrow for finance spending, investment, and job creation has been disrupted.

To restore confidence in our markets and our financial institutions, so they can fuel continued growth and prosperity, we must address the underlying problem.

The federal government must implement a program to remove these illiquid assets that are weighing down our financial institutions and threatening our economy. This troubled asset relief program must be properly designed and sufficiently large to have a meaningful impact, while including features that protect the taxpayer to the maximum extent possible. The ultimate taxpayer protection is the stability this troubled asset relief program provides to our financial system, even as it will involve a significant investment of taxpayer dollars. I am convinced that this bold approach will cost American families far less than the alternative – a continued series of financial institution failures and frozen credit markets unable to fund economic expansion.

I believe many Members of Congress share my conviction. I will spend the weekend working with members of Congress and their staffs to examine approaches to alleviate the pressure of these bad loans on our system, so credit can flow once again to American consumers and companies. Our economic health requires that we work together for prompt, bipartisan action.

As we work with the Congress to pass this legislation over the next week, other immediate actions will provide relief.

First, to provide critical additional funding to our mortgage markets, the GSEs Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac will increase purchases of mortgage-backed securities (MBS). These two enterprises must carry out their mission to support the mortgage market.

Second, to increase the availability of capital for new home loans, Treasury will expand the MBS purchase program we announced earlier this month. This will complement the capital provided by the GSEs and will help facilitate mortgage availability and affordability.

These two steps will provide some initial support to mortgage assets, but they are not enough. Many of the illiquid assets in our system today do not meet the regulatory requirements to be eligible for purchase by the GSEs or by the Treasury program.

I look forward to working with Congress to pass necessary legislation to remove these troubled assets from our financial system. When we get through this difficult period, which we will, our next task must be to improve the financial regulatory structure so these past excesses do not recur. This crisis demonstrates in vivid terms that our financial regulatory structure is sub-optimal, duplicative and outdated. I have put forward my ideas for a modernized financial oversight structure that matches our modern economy, and more closely links the regulatory structure to the reasons why we regulate. That is a critical debate for another time.

Right now, our focus is restoring the strength of our financial system so it can again finance economic growth. The financial health of all Americans – their retirement savings, their home values, their ability to borrow for college, and the opportunities for higher-paying jobs – depends on our ability to restore our financial institutions to a sound footing.

-30-

 SHARE

Initiatives

Financial Stability
Housing Finance Reform
Making Home Affordable
Recovery
U.S. China Strategic and Economic Dialogue

Bureaus

The Alcohol and Tobacco Tax and Trade Bureau
Bureau of Engraving & Printing
Bureau of The Public Debt
Community Development Financial Institutions Fund

Inspector General Sites

Office of Inspector General (OIG)
Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration (TIGTA)
Special Inspector General, Troubled Asset Relief Program (SIGTARP)
Report, Fraud Waste & Abuse

Wall Street Reform

Financial Crimes Enforcement Network
(FinCEN)
Financial Management Service
Internal Revenue Service
Office of The Comptroller of The Currency
Office of Thrift Supervision
U.S. Mint

Additional Resources

Budget and Performance
Freedom of Information Act (FOIA)
No FEAR Act Data

Required Plug-ins Adobe® Reader®

Privacy Policy | Site Map | Site Policies and Notice